The Disc Jockey

I DO not intend to condemn but to examine the present Nigerian Deejays, and the programmes they dish out on our Radio stations daily. Dee-jays, whatever their vocations are a part of broadcasting, and an interesting part too, as such, they should measure up to the required standard.

IF DISC Jockeys think they can continue to live in the pockets of their friends to the neglect of other unknown listeners, then such DJs are certainly not living up to expectation. Listeners, want to listen to professional presenters as they match music with some speeches which DJs call rappies and not outburst or noise-making.

Some DJs do not put the generality of the listeners in mind when presenting their programmes but merely present them the way the cassanova female counterparts want. A particular radio DJ was in the habit of dedicating every hit to his girlfriend, while another one in an attempt to let listeners know that he is part of the programme, would use motor park tous slangs like, wonyo si, jisoro and what have you, as those beautiful hits sail on. This is least expected of a fully emancipated disc jockey.

Another irritating habit that is very common among Nigerian DJs is inferiority complex. Some Nigerian DJ in an attempt to be with it, adopt the British or American accents, forgetting that a good Disc jockey is in his best when he presents his programmes the natural way. He must be able to comport himself and be natural in his presentation. He must possess the ability to use the mother tongue effectively and know where he stands among other Deejays in other stations.

Bauchi Programme Schedule

I am one of the regular readers of your magazine. Each time I buy a copy, I expect to see the Bauchi Broadcasting Corporation Radio programmes published therein, but none could be found. Does it mean that the corporation fails to send you its programme schedules or you find it difficult to get a space for this young Radio station?

Please make effort to publish the station's programme for the benefit of its people.

NATHANIEL GURGU,
MAIDUGURI

IT is true that we have not been publishing Bauchi Broadcasting Corporation Radio Programme Schedules.

We had earlier on contacted the Station's programme planners just as we did as regards other Radio Stations in the Federation. As soon as we hear from the station we shall surely publish its programme for the benefit of its listeners.

It's Igbo, Not Ibo

PLEASE allow me a space in your widely read magazine "Radio - TV Times" to call the attention of the general public to the correct spelling of the tribal name "Igbo".

For years now, it has been a controversial issue over the correct spelling of the word 'IGBO' which people either mistakenly or ignorantly call 'IBO'.

During the colonial days, the colonial masters found it difficult to pronounce the Igbo alphabets 'gb' and so they decided to eliminate 'g' from the letter and called it 'IBO'. It is also disheartening to hear some Igbos referring to themselves as 'Ibos'.

Charity, they say, begins at home. Let us be proud of our true culture. The right spelling is IGBC and not IBO.

Wants To Be Announcer

AS a regular reader of your journal Radio/TV. Times, I would like to see the faces of your Radio - TV staff who help dish out music to listeners. I also want to know the names of subjects one can study before becoming a broadcaster.

Can I be employed as an announcer after my West African School Certificate? I am proud of your journal please keep it up.

VICTORIA
LAGOS

YOU have to be a journalist to become a broadcaster and that means you would have undergone training at the Institute of Journalism where you will study journalism, Broadcasting and Public Relations. Or you can be employed with basic qualification like the WASC and be trained on the job. Goodluck.

Restore UFO Films

KINDLY allow me a space in your educative Radio/TV. Times to express my view on the disappearance of the Un-identified Flying Object (UFO) Films from the TV screen.

UFO started both in the Eastern and Western world and has re-appeared in Central Senegal as reported recently in one of the Nigerian dailies.

Viewers are anxious to watch this interesting films on the television. Nigerian scientists are also advised not to relent their efforts, in joining their world counterparts in studying the causes of and remedies to these un-identified flying objects.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Activities And Success In Nigeria Catalogued

IN our last issue Dr. O. Koleoso treated at length Government policy towards Technological Take-off in Nigeria. In his third lecture on Research and Development Activities in Nigeria and abroad, the facts of which is reproduced in this issue, he gave a vivid account of the research and development made so far in Nigeria on certain products like yam flour, pounded yam, beverages and food processing, electronics, chemical pharmaceuticals and engineering through research institutes in the universities.

RESEARCH and development activities represent one of the most important paths to technological take off. Research and Development or (R&D) activities have contributed immensely to the rapid technological development of the United States, Japan and other countries.

It has also been shown that R & D efforts are directly related to technological development. Countries which spend a large proportion of their Gross National Product on research and development experience faster technological growth than countries which spend less.

The Nigerian Government, no doubt, realises the importance of research and development and that is why it established Research Institutes which are wholly financed by it and are completely devoted to research and development. Government has also provided R & D facilities in some of our Universities.

A great deal of R & D activities are going on in some of our Universities — particularly the older ones which are better staffed and well-equipped.

These are mainly the Universities of Ibadan and Ife; University of Nigeria and the Ahmadu Bello University. Most of these Universities, which follow some foreign patterns, undertake basic or fundamental instead of applied research. Consequently most of the R & D efforts in these Universities have very little bearing on our local problems and are, therefore, of little impact.

Of late, however, the research and development activities in some of these universities are being re-orientated to solve local problems and are beginning to have meaning and impact on the local population. This new change in direction of R & D activities in our universities, is a move in the right direction. Typical examples of the results of the applied research carried out in our universities are the mechanised yam-pounding machine and the pounded yam flour.

Pounded yam is one of the favourite foods of many Nigerians. Although many people want to eat pounded yam thrice daily, the laborious method of preparing it scares them. Added to that is the fact that working housewives may not have enough time to prepare food. For ages, Nigerian have relied on the use of mortar and pestle to prepare their favourite pounded yam. Now, the university of Ife has come to the rescue by inventing a machine for making pounded yam. This innovation is most welcome.

Yet another innovation from both the Universities of Ife and Ibadan aimed at solving the problem of preparing pounded yam, is the discovery of a process of manufacturing pounded yam flour. This process makes it possible for people to make pounded yam without the use of the machine or the mortar and pestle. These two processes have revolutionised pounded yam technology in the country.

A number of other applied R & D activities are continuously being carried out in our universities in the areas of mechanised agriculture, food and beverage processing, electronics, chemical pharmaceuticals and engineering. But the finding of R & D activities in the universities is, unfortunately, still left entirely to the government.

The Government of Nigeria, like those of other developing countries, has some important tasks to carry out such as provision of good and adequate food for the population, electricity, good roads, water, health facilities, housing and other basic needs of life.

A lot of money is spent in meeting these needs with the result that only a very small amount of the national budget is available for research and development activities. With such limited resources, facilities for research and development will be inadequate and the impact of research and development on the society will be minimal.

In developed countries funding of R & D activities is not left to governments alone; part of it is borne by industries, in varying proportions. In England, government contribution to research and development activities is greater than that of the Industries; in Western Germany, industries contribute as much as government.

In Japan, the industries make greater contributions to R & D efforts than the government. The rapid development of Japan is, therefore, not surprising since R & D activities, carried out in industries or sponsored in Universities and Research Institutes by industries, are easily utilised for development, and production than those sponsored by the government.

Research Institutes have been known to play a vital role in the technological development of many countries. They are sometimes regarded as 'agents of technological growth' because they constitute the foundation for the growth of indigenous technology and the adaptation of imported technology.

OCTOBER LECTURES

Funding of research institutes vary from country to country. There are some private Research Institutes established by individuals and run on some form of foundation, others are established on state, national and regional basis. Because of high costs, industries never establish Research Institutes as such but incorporate an R & D unit in their establishment.

Better still, groups of industries in a related sector such as the breweries, textiles, and paint manufacture may, decide to set up joint Research Centres to cater for their common needs. This system cuts down on the R & D expenditure of each industry. It is sad to note that this system has still not been introduced in Nigeria by any of the existing industries in spite of the fantastic profits they make annually.

While most of the research institutes in developed countries operate on partial government grant and depend on contract research from industries for the greater part of their revenue, those in developing countries wholly depend on government grant for their existence. This is not surprising as the industries operating in developing countries are arms of bigger organisations with research facilities in their home country. Consequently, government funding of R & D activities in institutes in developing countries has to continue for a longer period.

Irrespective of the funding system, the activities of these institutes are similar — they are all aimed at applied research. Here, I would like to mention and talk about the activities of: The Central Food Technological, Research Institute in Mysore, India and the Korean Institute of Science and Technology in Seoul, South Korea.

The Central Food and Technological Research Institute in Mysore, India, is wholly founded by the government of India. This institute is involved in all aspects of food research — storage, processing, and preservation. The research projects are executed under a task force system. The laboratory, pilot plants, process and engineering units are fully equipped and well-staffed.

The commercialisation of their research findings are mainly channelled through a central body — The National Research and Development Corporation of India — though it is also possible to sell their technology directly. The Central Food Technological Institute has made a great impact in India, but perhaps its greater impact is the development of a beverage drink known as '77' which has rivaled and sent foreign soft drinks manufacturers packing out of India.

The other institute — the Korean Institute of Science and Technology in Seoul is built along American patterns and with a lot of American expertise and finance. The institute is partly founded by the Korean government and it derives the rest of its funds from contract research undertaken on behalf of government. Unlike the Institute in Mysore, India whose activities are concentrated on food technology, the Institute in Korea is similar to FIRO because it is broad-based and carries out research and development activities in food, applied biology, chemical technology, electronics, design and fabrication, analytical chemistry and synthetic fibres.

Among the many achievements of the research Institute in Korea are the development of various electronic gadgets like calculating machines and colour television, production of single cell protein from petroleum sources, and artificial hair for women — all from imported and adapted technology. These two examples will give, those who make policies on the establishment of Research Institutes, the opportunity of studying the two systems as they exist in India and Korea and finding out their advantages and disadvantages. It may be advisable to allow both systems, which are already operating in our country, to exist side by side rather than fade one out in favour of the other.

In Nigeria there are, at the moment, 22 functioning Research Institutes. Eighteen are engaged in agricultural research; three in industrial research and one in medical research. Some of these institutes are:

The Rubber Research Institute
The National Horticultural Research Institute
The National Root Crops Research Institute
The Forestry Research Institute
The National Veterinary Research Institute
The National Animal Production Research Institute
The Institute for Agricultural Research
The Institute of Agricultural Research and Training
The Nigerian Institute for Oceanographic and Marine Research
The Kainji Lake Research Institute.
The Projects Development Institute and
The Nigerian Building and Road Research Institute

In addition, most of the agricultural research institutes have concentrated

BANKING SYSTEM

Pivot of Country's Progress

By Our Economic Correspondent

ONE of the major objectives of the seminar on Banking held recently was to review the functions of the banking system and to explore ways of improving its future role in Nigeria's economic development.

The participants concerned themselves with finding the right answers to three vital questions. First, "Where do the banks fit in as the government economic programmes gather momentum after over 20 years of independence?" Secondly, "What ought to be the role of the banks in developing Nigeria?" Thirdly, "How can banks assist government in the formulation of financial policies?"

THE Nigerian banking industry, like other economic institutions such as insurance and shipping, had been in foreign hands for too long, right from the colonial era. Most of the expatriate banks were mere outposts of their headquarters in Bank of British West Africa, established in Nigeria in 1894; the Anglo-African Bank (1901) and Barclays Bank (Dominion, Colonial and Overseas) 1917.

THOSE foreign institutions enjoyed banking monopoly, taking directives from their parent bodies, without regard for the realities of the Nigerian economy. Their credit policies discriminated against local businessmen and their role was largely to provide services for foreign trading companies that brought in consumer goods and carried away raw situation led to the establishment of what can be described as Nigeria's first commercial banks -- the Industrial and Commercial Bank in 1929 and the Nigeria Mercantile Bank in 1931.

DUE to the onslaught of competition from their more experienced expatriate contemporaries, the two banks went into liquidation within seven years: That failure notwithstanding, the period, shortly before and after the Second World War, saw the birth of two other indigenous banks, the National Bank of Nigeria and the African Continental Bank. They have survived to be among the leading commercial banks in the country today. Since their establishment, several other indigenous banks have come into successful operation.

It should also be mentioned that in the heydays of foreign banks, Nigeria, being a colonial territory, had no Central Bank of its own and no indigenous legislations were made to regulate the banking industry.

THIS situation was certainly undesirable and, since banking is the main engine of economic growth, the Federal Government decided to intervene. The effort to set up a framework for a sound financial system that could support development led to the establishment of the Central Bank of Nigeria in 1957, followed by the Nigerian Industrial Development Bank.

GOVERNMENT intervention in the Nigerian Banking Industry has so far been carried out in two ways, namely, the enactment of legislation to regulate operations and equity participation. To date, the Federal Government has acquired controlling shares in all the expatriate banks in Nigeria.

THE rationale of government intervention is to involve the banks more actively in national development. Broadly, the government policy is to bring banks under Nigerian control in ownership and management so that decision-making in the sector is localised so as to ensure that their lending policy caters for such sectors that may not be readily attractive in terms of profit. Agriculture, housing and rural development are three such areas, yet they are the focal points of the present national development programme. By indigenisation, therefore, the banks lending is now very well diversified.

CONTRARY to the expectations of critics, the indigenisation of the banking sector has had a positive effect. In the past few years, there has been a proliferation of banks, even by foreign entrepreneurs operating in partnership with Nigerians.

THE high profit margins recorded by them have proved that the indigenisation policy is, after all, not a punitive measure against foreign investors. Furthermore, it must be pointed out that the open door policy of the Federal Government is, in itself, an unqualified invitation to foreign entrepreneurs in the banking and other areas to participate in the development of the Nigerian economy.

HOUSING PROJECTS

Govt's Move to House its Citizens

UNDER the Federal Housing programme, each state in the Federation is expected to have 2,000 housing units. The inclusion of the proposed Federal capital territory, Abuja, in the scheme brings the number of housing units to be built between now and December to 40,000.

The idea of the government participating in housing construction is certainly not new. Shortly after independence some regions established housing corporations which undertook the development of new estates in their areas of operation. The only problem which faced the corporations was that they soon ran out of funds and therefore found it difficult to continue the programme.

Later on, the housing problem in the country especially in the urban centres became so great that substantial government involvement, became imperative. This was because the combined investments of private individuals and institutions in the provision of accommodation failed to raise the supply of housing units to meet the demands for them. The result has been exorbitant rents.

In Lagos in the early 1960's for example it was possible to rent a fairly decent room for as little as between N8 and N10 per month. At that time also a two-bed room flat was available for between N60 to N80 per month depending on space and location. By the turn of the decade, however, there was a marked increase in rents.

Today the monthly rent charged on a room in Lagos with some facilities has gone up to anything between N20 and N25. It is difficult nowadays to come by a two-bedroom flat for anything less than between N100 and N150 a month. These figures do not apply to places like Ikoyi and Victoria Island in Lagos and some other low density areas where the rents are higher.

The situation is not better in many other urban centres where, judging by local standards, the rents now being demanded are in many cases more than 200 per cent compared with what was being charged some ten years ago. After allowance has been made for inflation, it is generally accepted in this country that more and more people are finding it almost impossible to find shelter. Those who manage to do so sometimes commit more than one third of their income to rents. This has led to overcrowding in many of our towns and cities.

THIS unhappy condition of living made the Federal and State governments to be more involved in providing decent accommodations in many parts of the country. As a result of this involvement, satellite towns have been growing around the Federal and some State capitals. The Festac Town and Satellite town in Lagos are clear examples. Thousand of families have since settled in the new towns.

The Federal housing estates in the relatively older states were also part of the attempts to increase the number of decent accommodations. The recent directive by the Federal Government to the effect that unfinished building projects under the Federal housing scheme should be completed is part of renewed efforts to solve the perennial problem of shortage of accommodation.

While these new projects are being embarked upon, it is necessary for the project executors to learn from the experience of the past. Those who live in some of these new estates for example, face a situation whereby decent accommodations were provided without adequate provision of basic amenities like water, hospitals or clinics schools and markets. The new lay-outs should not be denied these amenities.

On the whole, if the current pace of government participation in housing development is maintained, the people of Nigeria can look forward to an improvement in their accommodation and environment in not too distant a future.

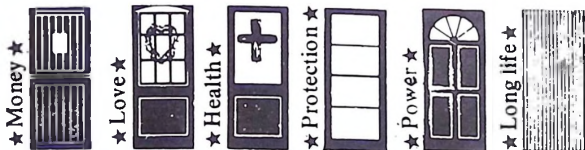

One of Government's housing projects in the capital.

Destitutes In Nigeria

Bid to Solve Social Problem

By Daninhun Alaja-Browne

THE number of destitutes roaming the streets in the country at the moment has been building up for many years. The situation worsened in the last five years or so when beggars from neighbouring states invaded our towns and cities where they complicated already existing problems.

BEGGARS in the country can be classified into three groups, namely destitute but able-bodied ones, those with physical handicaps, beggars with communicable diseases or mental problems.

THE effects of the increasing number of beggars in the country are obvious. First of all, beggars with communicable diseases who in normal circumstances would have been kept in isolation and treated, roam the streets thereby exposing more fortunate citizens to the danger of infection. Secondly, destitutes with sound bodies and minds could easily be driven to crime in their desperate bid for survival.

THOSE who are mentally disturbed also present a threat because they should normally be confined to prevent violent attacks on sane people. Furthermore, immigrant beggars, of course, worsen the situation and could easily abuse Nigeria's magnanimity and engage in activities inimical to her interests apart from creating new social problems.

THESE are valid reasons for the intensification of actions being taken by the Government to arrest the situation. Beggars who are physically and mentally fit could be deployed to farm settlements where they can be gainfully employed.

THOSE who have physical handicaps could be taught a trade from which they could earn a living. Destitutes with communicable diseases should be taken to relevant isolation centres for treatment and eventual rehabilitation. Those with mental diseases should also be confined to a mental clinic. The problem of foreign destitutes should be solved in consultation with their home governments.

IN awareness of the problems of the destitutes in Nigeria, the Federal Government created the National Council for Rehabilitation of the Disabled. The Council tries to work out programmes that would facilitate the rehabilitation of the needy, aged, the handicapped persons, so that they could be reintegrated into society and made to lead a happier purposeful life.

THE council functions as a forum for the exchange of information on rehabilitation and provides an avenue for interministerial planning and coordination. It also advises the government on legislative measures to be taken in areas relevant to rehabilitation services, such as provision of medical care, vocational guidance, special education and duty-free importation of machinery and equipment for the disabled.

THE council, in addition, organises publicity campaigns to promote public awareness and understanding of the problems of the person being rehabilitated. One of the current programmes of the Council is a survey of the disabled in the country. This long overdue exercise will doubtless be an important starting point since ascertainment of the location and statistics of the disabled would enhance planning for their rehabilitation.

THE THIRD development plan provided for the establishment of six rehabilitation centres in Anambra, Kaduna, Kano, Lagos, Oyo and Sokoto States. Already in Anambra State, the government has announced a rehabilitation plan. Under it, the state government will establish reception centres where food and shelter will be made available to the needy. The construction of the resettlement centre in Kaduna and Kano States is in progress while contracts for centres at Ibadan and Lagos are soon to be awarded.

HOWEVER, six rehabilitation centres, through a grand effort, will be grossly insufficient for the needs of 19 states. Furthermore, the resettlement programme of the government is not being given enough publicity. Beyond parting with the odd kobo or two in sympathy, the average Nigerian has no other notion about the resettlement programme of destitutes in the country.

THE problem of beggars on our streets has posed a great concern to the Federal Government and indeed to the citizenry as well. The establishment of enough resettlement centres and provision of community based services to complement them, will go a long way to solve the national problem of destitutes.

Vandalism In Sports

— Means Of Injecting Discipline And Sportsmanship In Matches

By Sebastine Ofurum

SEVERAL factors have been responsible for Vandalism in Sports arenas. Prominent among these are the inability by fans to accept defeat peacefully, the provocative songs and abuses by rival clubs or organizations and poor officiating.

VANDALISM in sports was first noticed in this country during inter-schools competitions in the early 1950s. There were school boys and girls whose stock-in-trade was victory at all cost or violence if otherwise. This display of indiscipline spread to association grounds and sporting arenas. With the coming of sports councils and the growth of clubs, various people started the organization of supporters or fan clubs. Their quest for victory became immeasurable and their zest for violence increased as defeat after defeat brought shame and abuse.

Although this violent trait was found in isolated cases all over Nigeria and indeed Africa, it was Europe and Latin America that surpassed it in sports vandalism. At a time in Nigeria, most violence occurred principally in Lagos, especially during explosive encounters involving top teams in the Lagos Amateur Football Association League Competitions. For a time vandalism was checked with the erection of iron railings and barriers and other crowd control measures at sporting arenas.

But on the 11th of July, 1974 when Stationery Stores lost to Nigeria Navy Football Club, the referee, and his linesmen had to be rescued by armed soldiers. There were several such incidents in 1978, and 1979 - one of which prompted the Lagos Amateur Football Association LAFA to place a two-year ban on one Club and asked the club to bear the total cost of repair or replacement of property damaged during a rampage by some club supporters.

Recent violent incidents were witnessed in Benin City after a match between Bendel Insurance and Spartans of Owerri. Vehicles were damaged or burnt and several people were injured. A similar incident occurred in Enugu one Saturday after a national League match between Rangers International and IICC Shooting Stars of Ibadan. Fans and Police clashed and tear gas was used to disperse the crowd. In the rampage, the Enugu temporary Stadium was damaged, people sustained injuries and the joy of sports destroyed.

It is necessary to point out that during the 12th African Cup of Nations Competition in March this year the African Football Confederation AFC had reasons to warn Nigerian spectators that matches involving the Green Eagles might be awarded to their opponents if acts of missile throwing into the pitch continued. It was a severe hint that our path to victory stood threatened. Again a disciplinary action had been imposed on Nigeria by the AFC which forbids the use of the National Stadium for football competitions in the Cup Winners and Champion Club Series. This followed acts of violence by Nigerian spectators against a Senegalese Club in 1979. It is pertinent to mention that an international body known as the Association Against Violence in Sports has been formed. It seeks among other things to promote discipline among spectators.

The Nigerian Football Association has identified itself with the objectives of the Organisation. What is left is for all sports Councils in the country to continue to take firm and prompt action against vandals in sports. It is also the duty of every Nigerian to show a high sense of discipline and sportsmanship during and after matches.

their efforts along scientific lines such as selective breeding and seed multiplication of the best seed variety but very little effort has so far been directed at solving the technological problems of developing local planting, harvesting and weeding equipment as well as machinery needed for processing and packaging these agricultural products to the level acceptable by industries.

There is great need for intensification of efforts in this direction. In order words some, if not all these agricultural research institutes must be allowed to broaden their sphere of activities to include engineering design and fabrication of appropriate equipment.

The possibility of overlap in the activities of these research institutes cannot be ruled out. This is why action is being taken by the Government to reduce the overlap and create greater effectiveness while new research institutes are to be created along industrial lines. These efforts are likely to enhance further our chances of early technological take off if well co-ordinated.

In addition, most of the agricultural research institutes have concentrated their efforts along scientific lines such as selective breeding and seed multiplication of the best seed variety but very little effort has so far been directed at solving the technological problems of developing local planting, harvesting and weeding equipment as well as machinery needed for processing and packaging these agricultural products to the level acceptable by industries.
